August s formula.--The other formula is that proposed by August, the constant values of which have been since corrected by the results of Regnault s determinations. In its abridged and simplified form, omitting certain terms which affect the result but slightly, and adapted to Fahrenheit temperatures, it is as follows: --El J 0-180 (-Q I--J 1130-f a for all wet-bulb temperatures above the freezing point, and for those below it--Tables calculated by this formula for the barometric pressure h =297 inches will be found in Guyot s Meteorological and Physical Tables published by the Smithsonian Institute at Washington; and Tables adapted to the mean latitude of 22 and the mean barometric pressures 297, 27 7, 25-8, and 23-4 are given in the collection of Tables which accompany this hand-book Tables IV, VI, VIII and X. These may be used for stations at all elevations up to 8,000 feet without serious error. 71. Grlaisher s factors.--Mr. J. Glaisher has endeavoured to save observers some of the trouble of computation, by determining empirically certain factors, which, multiplied into the difference of the wet and dry bulb thermometers, will give the difference between the temperature of the air and that of the dew point. The result is approximately correct for high and moderate humidities, and for stations at and near the level of the sea; but the factors cannot be...
