Her grandfather served in the Continental armies, and died soon after the close of the Revolution from exposure in the rigors of the service. Her father went into the Revolutionary ranks when only a lad of fifteen, and returned to the battle field five times as a member of different regiments. At Taneytown, Md., his command was called upon to escort Burgoyne s prisoners, captured at Saratoga, to Valley Forge. For his services in the Revolution he received a pension during life. An incident is related of his mother s family, showing the bravery of its female members when exposed to the dangers of savage warfare. During the French and Indian wars before the Revolution, in the absence of the men on military service, the Indians attacked their house and drove them to the attic. They defended themselves with great heroism, chopping off the fingers of the savages with hatchets, as they attempted to climb up to kill or capture them. General Hancock s Father - His Influence Over His Son. General Hancock s father, Benjamin F. Hancock, was born in Philadelphia, and at the early age of fifteen, accompanied our military forces to the banks of the Delaware river in the war of 1812-15. Being a youth of studious habits, and strong aspirations for solid attainments, he received a fair common school and classical education, and studied law. He was of that class of young men who continually advance, and in his maturity became a lawyer of eminence, and a citizen of sterling character and...
